"Come With Me Sir"

David Moore taught science at the neighborhood high school. He needed some expensive books for his work so he went out to buy them. After he had bought them, he put them in his car and went to buy some other things at some other shops. When he came back to his car at six o'clock, one car window was opened and the books were not there. While he was driving home, he thought of a plan to get his books back.

That evening David sat down and wrote a letter to the newspaper. The next day he went to the police station and reported the theft. On Thursday morning the following ad appeared in the newspaper.

At half past eight on Friday morning, David's first visitor arrived. David, took him into the kitchen, made him a cup of tea and asked him to wait. At exactly nine o'clock another man arrived.

"Mr. Moore?" the man asked.

"That's right", David said. "Can I help you?"

"I have some interesting and unusual books in very good condition", said the man, "You buy books, don't you?"

"Yes", answered David. "Let me see them".

The man opened the bag he was carrying and put some books on David's table. David turned to the kitchen and called out, "you can come in now and bring the list with you".

The policeman entered the living room. He read the name on the books and on the list in his hand. They were the same. "Come with me, sir", said the policeman to the man.
